WALNUT CREEK CALIFORNIA

Located in the East Bay region of the San Francisco Bay Area, Walnut Creek is exceptionally well-positioned. Its accessibility is strong: the city sits at the confluence of Interstate 680 and Highway 24, and benefits from a regional rail connection via the Bay Area Rapid Transit (BART) station in downtown. This connectivity makes it an attractive node not only for local patrons, but also for visitors and commuters from surrounding communities.

The city's downtown core is a recognized regional shopping and dining destination and features strong foot-traffic, walkability, and an expanding mix of upscale and lifestyle-oriented tenants. As a result, leasing in this market benefits from the area's concentration of retail, dining, cultural amenities, and an engaged consumer base.

Walnut Creek is home to approximately 70,000 residents. With a relatively mature population and a high level of educational attainment, the market tends to attract entrepreneurial, professional, and service-oriented consumers. Moreover, the limited housing and ownership-heavy environment means stable consumer presence rather than extremely transitory demographics.

The commercial property ecosystem in Walnut Creek is mature and well-established. Market reports show that the city is a major East Bay node for office, retail, and mixed-use, and the retail vacancy rate remains healthy in its core retail district. The combination of strong location, amenity pull, and stable, affluent population create an appealing narrative for leasing space in the area. Walnut Creek offers both the walk-in potential and the demographic support to drive sustainable
